

During our dating relationship I saw the following behaviors from Thomas:

1. He often used different names and assumed different personas. It was like he had multiple personalities.
2. He engaged in risk taking behaviors.
3. He tried to emotionally dominate his friends and other people.
4. He only had shallow relationships and friendships.
5. He was very egotistical and was very particular with his clothing and outward appearance. He exercised excessively.
6. He came from a very religious family but his faith was shallow.
7. I learned after he was arrested that he used recreational drugs such as methamphetamine, cocaine, and ecstasy.
8. He was a habitual liar.
9. He seldom made eye contact when he spoke to people.

Later in our relationship, as we were in college I noticed that Thomas had an affinity for feminine type male friends. I became suspicious that he might be bi-sexual or homosexual. I became convinced that he only had me as his girlfriend as an acceptable mate in his mother's eyes. As time went by his ability to perform sexually diminished to the point that he was often unable to perform at all. He occasionally avoided sex all together.

My observation of Thomas' parents' marriage is that it was not a very loving marriage and was not as solid as they made it out to be publically. Thomas's parents were very concerned with their image in the community. After Thomas got arrested while in high school for burglary, his mother avoided going out in public because she was embarrassed to be seen.

FURTHER AFFIANT SAYETH NOT.
